On Respectful Communications with Stage Talent

Over the many years of dancing, calling, and playing music at contra dances, we have noticed a dominant thread about our fellow dancers – they can be quite opinionated about their callers, musicians and sound engineers. We appreciate the passion; however, in recent months there have been incidents in the way these opinions have been expressed in Santa Barbara that have been unhelpful, even hurtful and for some, decrease our desire to take the Carrillo Ballroom stage. So we offer four guidelines that will aid in communicating with onstage talent:

- Please hold your comments to the caller or musicians to the break or the end of the evening. The talent is concentrating hard during the dance to provide the best experience for the dancers. Comments while the dance is in progress are a major distraction and almost always degrade the quality of the calling, music or both.

- Keep in mind that it is impossible to always please everyone. While we are very happy to listen your point of view, please consider that we often get very contradicting suggestions from different dancers. For example, one dancer may believe the band is playing too fast while another may think the band is playing too slow (and the caller may think we are playing juuuuusst right!).

- If you have difficulty hearing the caller, or the volume is uncomfortable to you, please don't tell the band. They can't do anything about it. Kindly let the sound engineer (or the caller when he/she is not calling/teaching) know your observations.

- Remember that while the callers, musicians and sound engineers try our hardest to make the dance special, for the most part we are not professionals. Just like you, this is what we do for fun. We show up early, leave late, and set up lots of equipment. And though we do get paid, the amount we get barely compensates us for our time and expenses. Our real compensation is the appreciation we get from the dancers (so don't be afraid to whoop and holler – we love it!). And we are trying to reach for the stars – to create a fresh, exciting experience for the dancers. Occasionally, what we try might not work. But often it does work, and when it does the dance benefits accordingly (more whooping and hollering!).

The success of a dance, most would agree, is the effective interaction between the caller, musicians, and the dancers themselves. (Certainly others also play key roles – sound engineer, volunteers, dance producers...but the core is these three elements.) This is not a performance the talent provides for the dancers, rather a cooperative effort to provide an exhilarating experience for everyone. The dancers feed off the energy of the caller and musicians, and that energy then gets sent back to the caller and musicians who feed off the dancers. The more the talent feels the respect and appreciation of the dancers, the more they will give back in return. And that's what we are all after, isn't it?

An April 24 Opportunity

The OpporTunists are a group of talented multi-instrumentalists from the San Francisco area who play tunes ranging from Celtic to old time on a variety of instruments for your dancing pleasure.

The OpporTunists include Alan Snyder on fiddle, keyboard, and guitar. Alan is well known among dancers in Southern California as a dancer and a musician, having played at many dances there in recent years with his former band, Bog an Lochan. Alan's musical background is centered on Cape Breton, Scottish, and Irish tunes, but with a variety of other influences.

Alan is joined by Topher Gayle, whose musical background ranges from bluegrass to swing to folk to just about anything. Topher plays acoustic bass, guitar, mandolin, mandola, ukelele, percussion, and pretty much anything else he can get his hands on.

Joining Alan and Topher on this tour is David Hansen on guitar, bass, and mandolin. David played for many years with Alan in Bog an Lochan, where he was well regarded for his driving guitar rhythm.
